Kamarck’s book on The End of Government as We Know It introduces the idea of a new way governing – “one that is more modern, more flexible, and less bureaucratic. It shows how, by looking beyond the bureaucratic option, we can increase the capacity and effectiveness of government in the twenty-first century.”

Provide a critical analysis of the above statement by focusing on TWO themes explored during the course:

- interorganisational policy implementation;
- policy networks
- public private partnerships
